There was a tailor in a village. A mahout also lived there. He used to lead the elephant to the nearby river to take bath. On the way, the elephant would stop before the tailor's shop. The tailor would give him a banana each day. This went on for several months.

On day, the tailor thought of working out a practical joke on the elephant. When the elephant stretched his trunk at the tailor as usual, instead of giving him a banana, the tailor pricked his trunk hard with a needle. The elephant trumpeted in pain. However, he did not do anything. All the people in the shop laughed.

Later while taking bath, the elephant filled his trunk with water. As he reached the tailor's shop, he stopped. Everyone wondered what he was going to do. Soil erosion means wearing away of the land's precious top soil. Soil erosion can be due to natural agents, like air, water or fire. The causes can also be man-made, as when there is excessive cultivation of land by farmers.

Marks	E	M	CM
Pg. 6 & 7

7

The effects of soil erosion are dangerous and life-threatening. On one hand it can result in floods which may kill a lot of people, and on the other hand it can lead to barren lands.

To avoid disasters like floods and droughts, we must make an attempt to prevent soil erosion. We can prevent this by building dams at appropriate places and by practicing contour farming. However there are many preventions and remediation practices that can curtail or limit erosion of vulnerable soils.
