A rich man lived in Varanasi. He had only one, adorable son who had just turned ten years old. He had a lot of land and property. He wanted to find a good advisor for his son before his death. A man who should be truthful and honest. This is what the rich man thought.

One day, he invited all his relatives to a grand feast. He asked each one of them whether he was a wise and a good person. Every relative called him the “wisest and best” man in the world. “Ahh!” shouted the rich man. He gave a shining diamond to each of his relatives. But one of the relatives remained silent. The rich man asked what he thought of him as a man. The relative replied, “You are an intelligent and good man but there have been more intelligent and better men than you”.

This time the rich man gave a smile of satisfaction. He gave him a sparkling diamond, the size of an almond. He had got the man he wanted. He appointed him as an advisor to his son. The next day, the relatives came again. They complained that the diamonds given to them yesterday were not genuine. “Yes, they were as false as your words,” said the rich man.
